Courses Taught

Semester at Sea Courses (in collaboration with the Institute for Shipboard Education)

SAS: Global Studies (Intercultural Specialist)

Global Studies is designed around a 102-day journey around the world. It prepares students for port and acquaints them with the geographies, histories, cultures, and current events of various fascinating places; deepens their understanding of the things they experience; and improves their intercultural communication skills. The course transforms diverse ports of call into thinkable, coherent voyages by highlighting connections and comparisons between them, examining global issues such as the environment, the world economy, dimensions of culture, and human rights. Students become global citizens, evaluating the roles they play in the world they live in, and considering strategies for a more respectful, fair, safe and sustainable future.

SAS: Conflict Management with International Focus

This semester-at-sea seminar explores theoretical, methodological, and practical specificities of international and cross-cultural conflict on the specific examples of four different regions: East Asia, Southeast Asia, Sub-Saharan Africa, and MENA region/Islamic world. Working around the issues of history, cultural memory, and world ideologies, this course transforms students into empathetic citizens with a global mindset and a communicative skillset of conflict resolution in culture-specific interactions as well as in the context of globalization, religious unrest, and ongoing migration.

SAS: Intercultural Communication: Experiential Learning in 11 Countries

This semester-at-sea seminar is centered on experiential learning about and in different Asian and African cultures, and building intercultural awareness through an ongoing contact with their members, as well as understanding of various beliefs, norms, attitudes, social practices, and communicative behaviors regarding intercultural relationships around the world. It examines culture-specific matrices of power and privilege, initiates a non-discriminatory intercultural dialogue, and converts students into intellectually-skilled and sensitive cosmopolitan citizens, able to embrace global diversity as a valuable asset of communication in the 21st century.

Education Abroad CoursesBridging Cultures: Civilization, Culture and the City

This 6-week-long research-intensive study abroad seminar examines historical, cultural, and communicative specificities of Italian-American intercultural relations, from the dawn of Roman civilization till the present day. Students are engaged in rigorous intercultural research in various locations: Rome, Sienna, Florence, Trequanda, Pompeii, Sorrento, Capri, and Naples. The aim of the course is to transform its participants into culturally aware, communicatively skilled democratic citizens of global community.
