Colorado State University acknowledges, with respect, that the land we are on today is the traditional and ancestral homelands of the Arapaho, Cheyenne, and Ute Nations and peoples. This was also a site of trade, gathering, and healing for numerous other Native tribes. We recognize the Indigenous peoples as original stewards of this land and all the relatives within it. As these words of acknowledgment are spoken and heard, the ties Nations have to their traditional homelands are renewed and reaffirmed.

CSU is founded as a land-grant institution, and we accept that our mission must encompass access to education and inclusion. And, significantly, that our founding came at a dire cost to Native Nations and peoples whose land this University was built upon. This acknowledgment is the education and inclusion we must practice in recognizing our institutional history, responsibility, and commitment.

For more about the CSU Land Acknowledgement, see landacknowledgment.colostate.edu.
Diversity & Inclusion on CSU Campus

This directory is for students, faculty, and staff at Colorado State University who are looking for the people and groups involved in campus efforts around inclusion, equity, and social justice.

What Are Diversity Efforts For?
The notion of diversity is a cornerstone of many institutions, including CSU. Efforts across campus include groups and people addressing a wide range of initiatives and needs.

Such efforts are intended to acknowledge, examine, and address inequalities in the policies, structures, and experiences at CSU. Some groups and roles are focused on serving marginalized populations with support, community, and specific services. Others focus on strategic initiatives around efforts such as education, training, or university policy.

A Word About the Word Diversity
We use the term diversity in the title of this directory because it is the one used by CSU for many efforts and entities on campus, such as the Office of the Vice President for Diversity. Departments and colleges as well as the university as a whole have diversity strategic plans, and many entities we list here use that term.

The word diversity is often used as a catch-all to refer to the makeup of social groups that include identities which are often underrepresented or actively shut out of institutions and groups. It is used widely in businesses, college campuses, and government in the U.S.

However, the term has some weaknesses. Many people reduce the term to mean primarily racial differences, and it has been criticized for being a polite way people can avoid talking about difficult issues such as racism. It can also lead people to problematic “identity-blind thinking,” which can render the experiences of marginalized groups invisible.

Colorado State University Diversity Statement
At Colorado State University, we are committed to enhancing diversity and equity through the inclusion of individuals reflective of characteristics such as: age, culture, different ideas and perspectives, disability, ethnicity, first-generation status, familial status, gender identity and expression, geographic background, marital status, national origin, race, religious and spiritual beliefs, sex, sexual orientation, socioeconomic status and veteran status. In addition, given the historic and legal discrimination that has existed in American society, particular emphasis needs to be placed on the inclusion of individuals who are members of groups that have been excluded.

Some scholars suggest the term equity because it emphasizes change and balance, others prefer social justice for its emphasis on righting system imbalances. Another good word is inclusion – this incorporates the idea of actively bringing a range of perspectives into your work, thinking, and life.
ABOUT THIS DIRECTORY

This directory lists standing, on-going units, groups, committees, and campus roles (people) that are directly related to diversity, equity, inclusion, and social justice efforts on CSU campus.

This directory will be updated annually to reflect additions and corrections. To request edits/corrections/ additions, please contact the CLA Faculty Coordinator for Diversity & Inclusion Rosa Mikeal Martey at rosa.martey@colostate.edu.

SECTIONS OF THE DIRECTORY

Every effort has been made to include all relevant entities, but new ones are created regularly, and we might not have found all those that exist on our large campus.
